How to Identify a Plumbing Leak

Sometimes, a plumbing leak is not as obvious as it may seem. While a broken dishwasher may be an obvious cause for water damage, hidden dripping leaks can cause problems over a long period of time. Use these tips to identify whether or not a plumbing leak has occurred in your household.

Check Your Water Meter

The best method to check for plumbing leaks is to check your water meter. Turn off all the water in your house, and check the water meter for any visible changes. If it begins to change, it means there is a leak somewhere in your home. Calling water damage cleanup professionals is your next step to ensuring no further damage is done.

Monitor Your Water Bill

Another method you can use to determine whether you have a leak is to compare your past water bills. If you know you have been using the same amount of water month to month but see the water bill rising, then you may have a leak in your house that has been causing damage. Your next step would be to call the professionals to help locate the place of damage and begin repairs.

Check Periodically

If you feel as if there is something afoot within your household when it comes to a plumbing leak, check the places that you suspect may be damaged. The back of cabinets, behind the washing machine, and more obvious places will be your best bet. If you happen to smell foul odors coming from any of these places, it is time to call the water damage repair experts. We will arrive to your property within the hour to begin the water damage repair process.
